The free event features a performance by conceptual composer and musician Nathan Felix, who activates Chris Park and Studio with various instruments including a six-sided keyboard.

The fascinating performance by Felix serves as the ideal backdrop to enjoy a lovely fall night, surrounded by the serene landscape of Chris Park and intriguing art on view in Studio's female-focused exhibition Reclaimed. Complimentary refreshments are served, including Gem & Bolt Mezcal and food by The Box Street Social.

Earlier this year, Felix won the Artist Foundation's Tobin Prize for Artistic Excellence People's Choice Award; his innovative style of introducing new audiences to classical music has been widely praised in San Antonio and beyond. About Nathan Felix Disenchanted with the world of punk, self-trained, Mexican-American, composer Nathan Felix found solace in the structure and arrangements of classical music somewhat by chance. Fueled by the crazy idea of writing a full symphony, he chose to bypass the rock n roll lifestyle after 3 years of touring, to focus all of his energy on composing the classical way.

In 2013, Felix looked to establish himself as a composer by releasing his 1st symphony, The Curse the Cross & the Lion, to critical acclaim including being featured by the BBC and numerous NPR stations around the USA. A subsequent documentary by director David Schulte titled, The Curse & The Symphony, “captured a contradictory story of a young, ambitious, and perhaps rebellious musician searching for identity and truth within classical structures of culture and society.” The documentary screened at over 40 film festivals, receiving numerous accolades, including Best Documentary Short at the Chagrin Documentary Film Festival and is now licensed by Gaiam TV.

The success of The Curse the Cross & the Lion opened an opportunity to travel to Bulgaria to debut a new symphonic piece for an orchestra in Burgas in the summer of 2013. Upon returning to the US, Felix began composing a choral symphony sung in Classical Latin titled, Neon Heaven. The US premiere took place at SXSW in Austin, TX and the European debut subsequently followed in Denmark at SPOT Festival with additional performances in Portugal and Mongolia.

In 2016, Felix was featured on PBS and nominated for a Lonestar Emmy for work on his 6-Piano project in which he restored six pianos for a concert featuring two new pieces. After the concert, Felix donated the pianos to schools in lower income neighborhoods in Austin. The 6 Piano Project has since been commissioned in San Antonio (2016), Barcelona (2017) and Melbourne (2017).

In addition to his work in classical music, Felix serves as director for the “street” choir, From Those Who Follow the Echoes, who most recently premiered Felix’s “Opera on a Bus”. In addition, Felix served as an official music ambassador for the US in China and composed music for a series of PSA’s for an international campaign by LIVESTRONG to raise cancer awareness in China and Mexico. In late in 2014, Felix reformed his band, The Noise Revival Orchestra, for a tour in Asia highlighted by festival dates in Japan and Taiwan where TNRO performed for crowds of 35,000 and 50,000.
